The shaded answers were all created by nasal place assimilation, which is a process where a nasal sound changes its place of articulation to match the place of articulation of a neighboring sound. In English, this routinely happens with the prefix in- (meaning “not”); for example, instead of saying impossible, we say impossible, with the n changing to an m to match the place of articulation of the following p (m and p are both formed at the lips, while n is formed farther back in the mouth, so the n is changing to be more like the p). More subtly, the n in inconceivable is often pronounced as the ng sound to match the place in the mouth where the following k sound is formed. In this puzzle, we have n changing to m before b or p, or changing to ng before g or k. Thus, Roman god -> roaming god, screenplay -> scream play, dune buggies -> doom buggies, and pin cushion -> ping cushion.
